THE GEMSTONE STORY

Where violet meets rose

Tanzanite is found in a single square mile on Earth — nestled in the foothills of Mount Kilimanjaro in Tanzania. Its trichroic nature means it shifts from deep violet to vivid blue to burgundy depending on the angle of light, making every earring a private light show.

These lab-grown tanzanites carry the same chemical composition and optical properties as mined stones, with none of the environmental cost. Cut into a heart brilliant — a shape requiring extraordinary skill — they are set in 10K, 14K, or 18K rose gold, whose warm blush amplifies the violet tones of the stone.

Starting at 0.5 total carat weight, configurable up to 10 carats, screw back or push back — crafted for the ear that insists on something singular.

WHY TANZANITE

1000× rarer than diamond

Discovered in 1967 by a Maasai tribesman near Arusha, Tanzania, tanzanite was introduced to the world by Tiffany & Co. and swiftly became one of the most coveted gemstones on the planet. Its vivid blue-violet hue and trichroic fire are unmatched in nature.

Color temperature: deep violet · vivid blue-violet · burgundy

COLOR SPECTRUM · TANZANITE TRICHROISM

Lab-Grown, Ethically Made

Chemically identical to mined tanzanite — no mining impact, no ethical compromise, and a fraction of the footprint.

Trichroic Fire

Rotates through violet, blue, and burgundy depending on the angle of light — no two moments look the same.

Rose Gold Amplification

Rose gold's warm blush casts a pink halo that intensifies the violet tones of tanzanite — a pairing designed by color theory.

Heart Brilliant Cut

Requires a master cutter's precision — each stone's lobes must be perfectly symmetrical for the heart shape to read at the lobe.

Lifetime Renaissance Promise

Every pair ships with a free appraisal, complimentary insurance quote, and lifetime prong inspection and cleaning.
